WHAT A SEASON!

The 2024-2025 Season Featured
Two Unique and Highly Theatrical Productions!
FAUST IN THE ANTHROPOCENE and RED

Faust in the Anthropocene featured a cast of 14 and an iconic Western tale interwoven with wisdom tales from the East

Faust in the Anthropocene, which premiered in April at The Hill Arts in Portland, was a prescient exploration of the Faust legend contrasted with teaching tales from the Land of Snows, Tibet. When the two storylines intersected, the unfolding drama created a sometimes funny, often thought-provoking juxtaposition of eastern and western sensibilities that provided a fascinating look at our modern times. The spare yet colorful production was met with appreciative and enthusiastic audience response, and the cast of 14 provided stellar performances all around.

RED featured Al D'Andrea as Mark Rothko and Tristan Rolfe as Ken, two artists grappling with the meaning of artistic expression in a commercialized world

According to the Boothbay Register, the reviewer who attended the show on opening night found the performances in Red to be "brilliant, really." The reviewer continues, "For me, the intensity of the conversations and debates about art and color, what it means to be an artist, and the complexity of trying to balance time creating with making a living made for absorbing storylines in this 90-minute show." These are "two gifted actors," she goes on to say. "This is a show you must experience!" says the Boothbay Register.
